Note: Academic years shown above reflect data applicable to the Fall semester’s entering freshmen bachelor’s degree candidates and two-year programs’ candidates. Undergraduate admission statistics reflect data for NYU, NYU Abu Dhabi, and NYU Shanghai, including those applicants who are Chinese nationals. NYU Abu Dhabi and NYU Shanghai are not reported in the U.S. Department of Education Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (“IPEDS”) because IPEDS data excludes any branch campus located in a foreign country.

Student Financial Aid (Unaudited)

The University's admissions and financial aid programs are designed to enable qualified students to attend the University regardless of their financial circumstances. Undergraduate and graduate students receive financial aid from loans, employment, government and private sources, and University funds. Financial aid provided from the federal and State governments is an important source of funds for students who otherwise might not be able to attend the University because of insufficient financial means. The following table sets forth the sources of financial aid for students at the University (including NYU Abu Dhabi and NYU Shanghai) for the past five academic years for which data is available:

State Aid to the University

Through fiscal year 2023-2024, New York University benefitted from a New York State program under which State aid is allocated to independent post-secondary institutions based on the number of certain academic degrees conferred in the preceding year. Specified dollar amounts were received for each bachelor degree, master degree, and doctoral degree awarded. The University used these funds to support institutional student aid. Beginning in Fiscal Year 2025, NYU will no longer receive funding from this program. The following table sets forth the State aid received for the most recent New York State fiscal years, which ended on March 31st.
